- I turn'd my weary side, but still in vain,
Though full of youthful health and void of pain. Dryden.
He is full of wants which he cannot supply, and compass'd about with infirmities which he cannot remove. Tillotson's Serm.
From yon bright heaven our author fetch'd his fire,
And paints the passions that your eyes inspire;
Full of that flame, his tender scenes he warms,
And frames his goddesses by your matchless charms. Grav.
3. Stored with any thing; well supplied with any thing.
Full of days was he;
Two ages past, he liv'd the third to see. Tickell.
4. Plump; faginated; fat.
A gentleman of a full body having broken his skin by a fall, the wound inflamed. Wijeman's Surgery.
5. Saturated; fated.
I am full of the burnt offerings of rams. Isa. i. 11.
The alteration of scenes feeds and relieves the eye, before it be full of the same object. Bacon.
6. Crowded in the imagination or memory.
Every one is full of the miracles done by cold baths on de-cayed and weak constitutions. Locke.
7. That which fills or makes full; large; great in effect.
Water digesteth a full meal sooner than any other liquor.
8. Complete; such as that nothing further is desired or wanted.
That day had seen the full accomplishment
Of all his travels. Daniel's Civil War.
Being tried at that time only with a promise, he gave full credit to that promise, and still gave evidence of his fidelity as fast as occasions were offered. Hammond's Pract. Catechism.
The resurrection of Jesus from the dead hath given the world full assurance of another life. Tillotson, Serm. 5.
9. Complete without abatement; at the utmost degree.
At the end of two full years Pharaoh dreamed. Genesi.
After hard riding plunge the horses into water, and allow them to drink as they please; but gallop them full speed, to warm the water in their bellies. Swift's Direct. to the Groom.
10. Containing the whole matter; expressing much.
Where my expressions are not so full as his, either our language or my art were defective; but where mine are fuller than his, they are but the impressions which the often reading of him hath left upon my thoughts. Denham.
Should a man go about with never so set study to describe such a natural form of the year before the deluge as that which is at present established, he could scarcely do it in so few words, so fit and proper, so full and express. Woodward.
11. Strong; not fit and proper; not attenuated.
I did never know to full a voice issue from so empty a heart; but the saying is true, the empty vessel makes the greatest sound. Shakespeare's Henry V.
Barrels placed under the floor of a chamber, make all noises in the same more full and resounding. Bacon's Nat. History.
Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full resounding line. Pope.
12. Mature; perfect.
In the Sultanry of the Mamelukes, slaves reigned over families of free men; and much like were the case, if you suppose a nation, where the custom were that after full age the sons should expulse their fathers and mothers out of their possessions. Bacon's Holy War.
13. [Applied to the moon.] Complete in its orb.
Towards the full moon, as he was coming home one morning, he felt his legs faulter. Wijeman's Surgery.
14. Noting the conclusion of any matter, or a full stop.
Therewith he ended, making a full point of a hearty figh. Sidney.
15. Spread to view in all dimensions.
Till about the end of the third century, I do not remember to have seen the head of a Roman emperor drawn with a full face: they always appear in profile. Addison on Medals.
FULL. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. Complete measure; freedom from deficiency.
When we return,
We'll see those things effected to the full. Shak. Henry VI.
He liked the pomp and absolute authority of a general well, and preserved the dignity of it to the full. Clarendon, b. viii.
The picture of Ptolemy Philopater is given by the foremen-tioned authors to the full. Dryden's Preface to Cleomenes.
Sicilian tortures and the brazen bull,
Are emblems, rather than express the full
Of what he feels. Dryden's Pers. Sat. iii.
If where the rules not far enough extend,
Some lucky licence answer to the full
Th' intent propos'd, that licence is a rule. Pope's Criticism.
2. The highest state or degree.
The swan's down feather,
That stands upon the swell at full of tide,
Neither way inclines. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
3. The whole; the total.
The king hath won, and hath sent out
A speedy pow'r to encounter you, my lord:
This is the news at full. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

FUL

- But what at full I know, thou know'st no part;
I knowing all my peril, thou no art. Shakespeare.
4. The state of being full.
When I had fed them to the full. Jer. v. 7.
5. [Applied to the moon.] The time in which the moon makes a perfect orb.
Brains in rabbits, woodcocks, and calves, are fullest in the full of the moon. Bacon's Natural History.
FULL. adv.
1. Without abatement.
In the unity of place they are full as scrupulous; for many of their critics limit to that very spot of ground where the play is supposed to begin. Dryden's Dramatick Poets.
A modest blush he wears, not form'd by art;
Free from deceit his face, and full as free his heart. Dryden.
The most judicious writer is sometimes mistaken after all his care; but the hasty critic, who judges on a view, is full as liable to be deceived. Dryden's Aurengz. Preface.
Since you may Suspect my courage, if I should not lay,
The pawn I proffer shall be full as good. Dryd. Virg. Poet.
2. With the whole effect.
'Tis the pencil, thrown luckily full upon the horse's mouth to express the foam, which the painter, with all his skill, could not perform without it. Dryden's Dufshoy.
From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This universal frame began:
From harmony to harmony,
Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.
3. Exactly.
Full in the centre of the sacred wood,
An arm arifeth of the Stygian flood. Addison on Italy.
Full nineteen sailors did the ship convey,
A hole of nineteen dolphins round her play. Addison, Ovid.
4. Directly.
He met her full, but full of warefulness. Sidney.
He then confronts the bull,
And on his ample forehead aiming full,
The deadly stroke descending pierc'd the skull. Dryden.
At length resolv'd, he throws with all his force
Full at the temples of the warrior horse. Dryden's En.
5. It is placed before adverbs and adjectives, to intend or strengthen their signification.
Why on your shield, so goodly fear'd,
Bear ye the picture of that lady's head?
Full lively is the semblant, though the substance dead. F. 2.
I was set at work
Among my maids; full little, God knows, looking Either for such men or such business. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Full well ye reject the commandment. Mar. vii. 9.
Adam was all in tears, and to his guide
Lamenting turn'd full sad. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
You full little think that you must be the beginner of the discourse yourself. Moré's Divine Dialogues.
Full little thought of him the gentle knight. Dryden.
Full well the god his sister's envy knew,
And what her aims and what her arts pursue. Dryden.
There is a perquisite full as honest, by which you have the best part of a bottle of wine for yourself. Swift.
FULL is much used in composition to intimate any thing arrived at its highest state, or utmost degree.
FULL-BLOWN. adj. [from full and blown.]
1. Spread to the utmost extent, as a perfect blossom.
My glories are past danger; they're full-blown:
Things, that are blasted, are but in the bud. Denb. Sophy.
My full-blown youth already fades apace;
Of our short being 'tis the shortest space! Dryden's Juven.
2. Stretched by the wind to the utmost extent.
He who with bold Cratinus is inspir'd,
With zeal and equal indignation fir'd;
Who at enormous villany turns pale,
And steers against it with a full-blown sail. Dryd. Pers. Sat.
FULL-BOTTOMED. adj. [from full and bottom.] Having a large bottom.
I was obliged to sit at home in my morning-gown, having paw'd a new suit of cloaths and a full-bottomed wig for a sum of money. Guardian, No. 166.
FULL-EARED. [from full and ear.] Having the heads full of grain.
As flames roll'd by the winds conspiring force,
O'er full-eared corn, or torrents raging course. Denham.
FULL-EYED. [from full and eye.] Having large prominent eyes.
FULL-FED. [from full and fed.] Sated; fat; faginated.
All as a partridge plump, full-fed and fair,
She form'd this image of well-bodied air. Pope's Dunciad.
FULL-LADEN. [from full and laden.] Laden 'till there can be no more.
It were unfit that so excellent a reward as the Gospel promises should stoop down, like fruit upon a full-laden bough, to be plucked by every idle and wanton hand. Tillotson's Serm.

FULL-SPREAD.

FUL

- FULL-SPREAD. [from full and spread.] Spread to the utmost extent.
How easy 'tis, when destiny proves kind,
With full-spread sails to run before the wind;
But those that 'gainst stiff gales lavinger go,
Must be at once resolv'd and skilful too. Dryden.
FULL-SUMMED. [from full and summ'd.] Complete in all its parts.
The time was that the cedar stretch'd forth his imperial branches as far as the mountains of the moon, and that the king of birds nest'd within his leaves, thick feathered, and with full-summed wings fastening his talons East and West; but now the eagle is become half naked. Howell's 1st Ec. Forest.
TO FULL. v. a. [from full, Latin.] To cleanse cloth from its oil or grease.
FULLAGE. n. f. [from full.] The money paid for fulling or cleansing cloth.
FULLER. n. f. [from full, Latin.] One whose trade is to cleanse cloth.
The clothiers have put off
The spinsters, carders, fullers, weavers. Shakespeare, H. VIII.
His raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can whitener them. Mar. ix. 3.
FULLERS EARTH. n. f.
Fullers earth is a marl of a close texture, extremely soft and unctuous to the touch: when dry it is of a greyish brown colour, in all degrees, from very pale to almost black, and generally has something of a greenish cast in it. The finest fullers earth is dug in our own island. Hill's Mat. Medica.
The fullers' earth of England is very various, and it very much exceeds any yet discovered abroad in goodness; which is one great reason why the English surpass all other nations in the woollen manufacture. Woodward on Fossils.
FULLERY. n. f. [from fuller.] The place where the trade of a fuller is exercised.
FULLINGMILL. n. f. [from full and mill.] A mill where the water raises hammers which beat the cloth 'till it be cleansed.
By large hammers, like those used for paper and fulling-mills, they beat their hemp. Morimer.
FULLY. adv. [from full.]
1. Without vacuity.
2. Completely; without lack; without more to be desired.
There are many graces for which we may not cease hourly to sue, graces which are in bestowing always, but never come to be fully had in this present life; and therefore, when all things here have an end, endless thanks must have their beginning in a state which bringeth the full and final fatisfaction of all such perpetual desires. Hooker, b. v. f. 43.
He fully possessed the entire revelation he had received from God, and had thoroughly digested it. Locke.
The goddess cry'd
It's enough, I'm fully satisfy'd. Addison's Ovid's Metam.
FULMINANT. adj. [from fulminant, Fr. fulminans, Latin.] Thundering; making a noise like thunder.
TO FULMINATE. v. n. [from fulmineo, Lat. fulminare, French.]
1. To thunder.
2. To make a loud noise or crack.
Whilst it was in fusion we cast into it a live coal, which presently kindled it, and made it boil and flash for a pretty while: after which we cast in another glowing coal, which made it fulminate afresh. Boyle.
In damps one is called the suffocating, and the other the ful-minating damp. Woodward's Natural History.
3. To issue out ecclesiastical censures.
TO FULMINATE. v. a. To throw out as an object of terror.
As excommunication is not greatly regarded here in England, as now fulminated; so this constitution is out of use among us in a great measure. Ayliffe's Parergon.
FULMINATION. n. f. [from fulminatio, Latin; fulmination, French.]
1. The act of thundering.
2. Denunciations of censure.
The fulminations from the vatican were turned into ridicule. Ayliffe's Parergon.
FULMINATORY. adj. [from fulmineus, Latin; from fulminate.]
Thundering; striking horror.
FULNESS. n. f. [from full.]
1. The state of being filled so as to have no part vacant.
Your heaven-offering shall be reckoned the fulness of the wine-press. Numb. xviii. 27.
To the houses I wish'd nothing more than safety, fulness, and freedom. King Charles.
2. The state of abounding in any quality good or bad.
3. Completeness; such as leaves nothing to be desired.
Your enjoyments are so complete, I turn wishes into gratulations, and congratulating their fulness only with their continuance. South.
4. Completeness from the coalition of many parts.
The king set forwards to London, receiving the acclama-tions and applauses of the people as he went; which indeed were true and undesigned, as might well appear in the very demonstrations and fulness of the cry. Bacon's Henry VII.

FUM

5. Completeness; freedom from deficiency.
He is the half part of a blessed man,
Left to be finished by such as she;
And the fair divided excellences,
Whose fulness of perfection lies in him. Shakespeare, K. John.
6. Repletion; satiety.
I need not instance in the habitual intemperance of rich tables, nor the evil accidents and effects of fulness, pride and lust, wantonness and softness. Taylor's Rule of living body.
7. Plenty; wealth.
To lapse in fulness
Is forer than to lie for need; and fallhood
Is worse in kings than beggars. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
8. Struggling perturbation; swelling in the mind.
A principal fruit of friendship is the ease and discharge of the fulness of the heart, which passions of all kinds do cause and induce. Bacon, Essay 28.
9. Largeness; extent.
There wanted the fulness of a plot, and variety of characters to form it as it ought; and perhaps something might have been added to the beauty of the style. Dryden.
10. Force of sound, such as fills the ear; vigour.
This sort of pastoral derives almost its whole beauty from a natural ease of thought and smoothness of verse; whereas that of most other kinds consists in the strength and fulness of both. Pope.
FULSOME. adj. [from fülle, Saxon, foul.]
1. Nauseous; offensive.
The skilful shepherd peel'd me certain wands;
And in the doing of the deed of kind,
He fluck them up before the fulsome ewes. Shakespeare.
He that brings fulsome objects to my view,
With nauseous images my fancy fills,
And all goes down like oxymel of squills. Roscommon.
Now half the youth of Europe are in arms,
How fulsome must it be to stay behind,
And die of rank diseases here at home? Ottway's Orphan.
2. Of a rank odious smell.
White satyrion is of a dainty smell, and bean-flowers:
again, if the plant puts forth white flowers only, and those not thin or dry, they are commonly of rank and fulsome smell.
Bacon's Natural History, No. 507.
3. Tending to obscenity.
A certain epigram, which is ascribed to the emperor, is more fulsome than any passage I have met with in our poet. Dryden.
FULSOMELY. adv. [from fulsome.] Nauseously; rankly; ob-scenely.
FULSOMENESS. n. f. [from fulsome.]
1. Nauseousness.
2. Rank smell.
3. Obscenity.
No decency is considered, no fulsome is omitted, no venom is wanting, as far as fulness can supply it. Dryden.
FUMADO. n. f. [from fumar, Latin.] A smoked fish.
Fish that serve for the hotter countries, they used at first to fume, by hanging them up on long sticks one by one, drying them with the smoke of a soft and continual fire, from which they purchased the name of fumados. Covew.
FUMAGE. n. f. [from fumar, Latin.] Hearthmoney. Dia.
FUMATORY. n. f. [from fumaria, Lat. fumetoria, Fr.] See FUMITORY.
It hath divided leaves resembling those of the umbelliferous plants: the flowers, which are collected into a spike, are of an anomalous figure, somewhat resembling a papilionaceous flower, consisting of two petals or leaves, open like two lips, the upper lip ending in a spur: the footstalk is joined to the middle part of the flower: the fruit is either of a long or a round figure, which is like a pod. Miller.
Her fallow leas
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumatory, Doth root upon. Shakespeare's Henry V.
TO FUMBLE. v. n. [from fummelen, Dutch.]
1. To attempt any thing awkwardly or ungainly.
Our mechanic thefts will have their atoms never once to have fumbled in these their motions, nor to have produced any inept system. Cudworth.
2. To puzzle; to strain in perplexity.
Am not I a friend to help you out? You would have been fumbling half an hour for this excuse. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
3. To play childishly.
I saw him fumble with the sheets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his finger's end. Shakespeare's Henry V.
TO FUMBLE. v. a. To manage awkwardly.
As many farewells as be stars in heav'n,
With distinct breath and config'd kisses to them,
He fumbles up all in one loose adieu. Shakespeare.
His greasy bald-pate choir
Came fumbling o'er the heads, in such an agony,
They told 'em false for fear. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
FUMBLER. n. f. [from fumble.] One who acts awkwardly.
FUMBLINGLY. adv. [from fumble.] In an awkward manner.
FUMER. n. f. [from fumus, French; fumus, Latin.]
1. Smoke.
